No. 244.

ANSPACH, Nov. 26.

HE king of Great Britain, sovereign of the most noble order of the Garter, having been pleased to commission sir Charles Hanbury Williams, knight of the most honourable order of the Bath, and John Anstis, Esq; Garter principal king at arms, to be his majesty's commissioners plenipotentiaries for the investing his most serene highness Charles William Frederic, margrave of Brandenbourg-Anspach, with the whole habit and ensigns of the most noble order of the Garter; Mr. Anstis arrived here from England the 21st instant, attended by his secretary, and a messenger of state; and sir Charles Hanbury Williams came hither the day following, with a great retinue. The commissioners plenipotentiaries were lodged at court, and had guards placed at their respective apartments.

On Saturday the 23d instant, the day appointed for beginning the ceremony, the commissioners plenipotentiaries were conducted through the great hall to an audience of his highness. The gentlemen in waiting opened the doors, the commissioners entered. The king at arms having delivered the letters of credence, and the book of statutes of the order, to sir Charles Hanbury Williams, the latter presented them to the margrave. In the evening his highness gave an instrument under his hand and seal, whereby he promised to observe every article not contrary to the religion professed by him, or derogatory to any rights and privileges of the holy Roman empire, or to the order of the Black Eagle, of which he is already a knight companion: After which the commissioners plenipotentiaries taking the garter richly set with brilliants, from a silver table, whereon it was placed, buckled it upon the margrave's left leg, the king at arms reading the admonition in Latin.

Then they took the blue ribbon from the same silver table, and placed it over the left shoulder of his highness, bringing it athwart under the right arm, with the diamond George, the king at arms reading the admonition.

The margrave dined in public in the great hall, sir Charles Hanbury Williams being seated next to his highness, and the king at arms next to her royal highness the margravine.

On Sunday the 24th instant, the day of investiture, sir Charles Hanbury Williams, and the king at arms habited in his mantle, with the other ensigns of his office, were conducted and introduced in the same manner. The following ensigns of the order, viz. the commission of the sovereign, the surcoat, sword, mantle, hood, great collar, book of statutes, and the cap and feathers, were laid on a crimson velvet cushion, laced with gold, upon a silver table.

The commissioners plenipotentiaries first took off the margrave's upper garment; and his highness taking off his sword, which was of gold, gave it to the king at arms as his accustomed fee, who wore it during the whole ceremony. Then they put the surcoat upon his highness, and the sword of the order. Immediately after, her royal highness the margravine was led by the first minister, baron Seckendorff, through the range of chambers, into that where the investiture was to be performed, preceded by her great chamberlain, and followed by the ladies of the court.

All the ministers, privy counsellors, and gentlemen, followed; M. Reitzenstein carried the hood upon a cushion; major-general M. de Kronegk the book of statutes; major general de Polnitz the great collar; the great master of the horse, M. de Polnitz, the cap and feathers, richly adorned with diamonds and precious stones; then followed the king at arms, carrying upon a crimson velvet cushion, fringed and laced with gold, the sovereign's commission, and the mantle of the order.

Sir Charles Hanbury Williams, knight of the most honourable order of the Bath.

The grand marshal and the great butler with their staves.

His most serene highness the margrave, in the under habit of the order, supported by their excellencies M. the count de Pappenheim, hereditary marshal of the Holy empire, and M. the veldt-marshal baron de Diemar, grand commander of the Teutonic order.

Immediately upon their entry into the salon, the privy councellors, officers, and gentlemen of his highness, thus proceeding by pairs, made three obeisances jointly towards the stall of the sovereign, and repeated the same in the middle, and at the places appointed for them.

The stall erected for the sovereign, with a canopy, was of crimson velvet, richly laced with gold; in which stall, above the chair, were the arms of England, impaled with St. George's cross.

His highness the margrave having also made the like reverences, ascended into his stall, which was of crimson satin, with a canopy laced with gold; and the arms of the most serene house of Brandenbourg-Anspach were above the chair; where seating himself, the commissioners plenipotentiaries did the like in their respective chairs.

The music played for some time; and when it ceased, sir Charles Hanbury Williams rose up, and making an obedience to the sovereign's stall, and to the margrave, made a speech in French, setting forth the antiquity and dignity of this most noble order; in answer to which the baron de Seckendorff, principal secretary of state, made a speech in the same language.

Which being ended, the king at arms delivered the commission to sir Charles, who presented it to the margrave, and his highness gave it to his private secretary to be read aloud, during which time all persons stood up. The secretary having read it, returned it to his highness, who gave it to the king at arms, to be preserved among the archives of the order.

The music then played for some time, during which his highness reposed himself in his stall, and the commissioners plenipotentiaries sat down in their chairs.

After which the king at arms rose up, and making an obedience to the sovereign's stall, and then to his highness, took from the table whereon the ensigns of the order were laid, the mantle, and giving it to sir Charles, they jointly invested his highness therewith, the king at arms reading the admonition in Latin.

In the same manner the hood was delivered, and fixed upon the right shoulder of his highness.

The collar was put on in like manner, the king at arms reading the admonition in Latin.

Then sir Charles delivered to his highness the book of statutes.

Lastly, the commissioners plenipotentiaries placed the cap and feathers on his highness's head, and then made a reverence to the stall of the sovereign.

After a short repose, the king at arms stood up, and making his obeisance to the stall of the sovereign, and also to the margrave, proclaimed in Latin the styles of the sovereign, and of his most serene highness.

The proclamation of the styles being made, the trumpets sounded, and the kettle drums beat, and a general discharge of the cannon was made.

The procession returned in the like manner, four gentlemen bearing the train of the margrave's mantle.

When the desert was put upon the table, his highness took off his cap, and drank health, first to the king of Great Britain, sovereign of the most noble order of the Garter; then to their royal highnesses the prince and princess of Wales, and all the royal family; and lastly to the knights companions of the most noble order of the Garter.

Sir Charles Hanbury Williams drank prosperity to the house of Brandenbourg-Anspach, and the healths of the emperor and empress queen.

The

The cannon were continually fired from the beginning of the ceremony till the evening, when the whole city was illuminated. The whole solemnity was conducted with great magnificence and splendor.

LONDON.

September 22. The following remarkable epitaph is in Whitby church yard, in the county of York.

'Here lies the bodies of Francis Huntrodds and Mary his 'wife, who were both born on the same day of the week, 'month, and year; married on the day of their birth; and af-'ter having 12 children born to them, died aged 80, on the 'same day of the year they were born and married, the one 'not above five hours before the other.

On the foregoing Epitaph.

Husband and wife could ne'er more fitly join,
Fate so concern'd, the knot must grow divine.
One scarce had being 'til the other was,
And one but just surviv'd the other's loss:
Neither felt spark of Love's celestial fire,
But what the happy other did inspire.
Oh joy consummate! wedlock bless'd with love!
Like this in distant ages, who can prove
Two strings of music so wound by one hand,
Which can their tuneful unison command,
In sympathetic sound return their voice,
And in each other's harmony rejoice;
As you, wound up by Fate's unerring skill,
Still found a charming unison in will.
A fitter match sure there could never be,
Who in their lives and deaths did so agree.

September 1, Sunday morning, about half an hour after 3 o'clock, a fire broke out at Mr. Harwood's in Grocers Alley in the Poultry, which burnt that house and Mr. Medley's house adjoining, and three other houses, and very much damaged the Poultry compter, a loft belonging to the right honourable the lord mayor adjoining to Grocers hall, and several other houses. The fire would probably have done more mischief, had there not been great plenty of water, and speedy assistance from Newsham and Ragg's engines.

There were above fifty persons in the Poultry compter for debt, &c. when the fire happened, who were set at liberty for fear of being burnt; about forty of them are since returned. The felons in the said prison, nine in number, escaped at the same time, and only one of them has been retaken.

We hear that a man who endeavour'd to save himself, by getting out of a window, had the misfortune to fall down, and was killed on the spot.

The wife of Mr. Mears, lace-merchant, in Cheapside, died of a fright, occasioned by the fire.

September 7. They write from Hamburgh, that the Russian ministers have a very strong suspicion that an offensive alliance has been lately concluded between a certain Northern crown and the Ottoman Porte, to which they attribute the declaration that was lately made on the part of the Grand Signior to the Russian ambassador, that his sublime highness has a great interest in preserving the ballance of power in the North. These advices likewise say, that the people of Courland complain heavily of the great number of troops quarter'd amongst them; that there is no longer any talk of a new election, but instead of it a rumour prevails, that a matter of very great importance will speedily break out.

The lords of the admiralty have been pleased to give orders for surveying the Medway's prizes and all the old men of war, in order to their being broke up or refitted.

There are letters in town which mention, that the city of Elbingen in Germany is destroyed by fire.

Edinburgh, Sept. 19. There has been a great take of salmon in the river Spey, several ship-loads being sail'd for the streights; and there is a very good prospect of a successful herring fishery. But the right of fishing in the northern seas, about the isles of Orkney and Schetland, exclusive of the subjects of Denmark, is called in question by the Danes, who pretend to the same exclusive right. In proof of this, they allege that Christian I. king of Denmark, on marrying his daughter Margaret, 1469, to James III. of Scotland, bound himself to give with her a dowry of 60,000 florins; but finding himself, on account of the Swedish wars, unable to pay so much ready money, it was stipulated in the marriage contract to pay 10,000 florins, and for the rest, to assign to the king of Scotland the Hebudic, or Orkney isles. But king Christian being prevented, by some critical circumstances, from paying down more than 2000 florins, he mortgaged to his son-in-law the isle of Schetland for the remainder, reserving to himself a right of redemption. The court thinks itself authorized to reclaim all those islands, on reimbursing the sums for which they were engaged; and further pretend, that if the right of redemption had not been expressly reserved, the English could not arrogate the least right to that fishery, and to the adjacent seas, which were never mortgaged, and necessarily belong to the first possessors of the isles.

A poor chairman's wife, aged about 70, was lately deliver'd of a child, which thrives, and is suckled by the mother, who never had one before; her husband is about the same age.

Dublin, September 9. We hear from Belfast, that they are very apprehensive of a murrain amongst the cattle, as there are several cows seized with the distemper called the big head, and one of them dead of the same; and that some swine, by drinking up the blood, were instantly killed.

At Maghrafelt, on the 22d ult. in a terrible storm of lightning and thunder, a ball of fire came down a chimney into a room, where was a woman and her two sons, and another person, which burnt off the skirt of the coat of one sitting by the fire, and lighting on the floor, roll'd about several times; then dividing into two parts, one burst, and scorch'd another of the company; the other ascended, forced it's way through the floor of the chamber, where were two young women, and bursting with a great explosion, struck one of them instantly dead; and tho' no wound appeared on the body, but part of the skin scorched as it were with gun-powder, yet the bones were all broken as if pounded.

Charlestown, in South-Carolina, October 30.

Advice has been received, that about ten days ago Mr. Robert Kelly, one of our traders among the Upper Cherokee Indians, was murder'd by some French Indians.

We hear, that the Friend's Good will, capt. Crawford, with upwards of 400 Palatines on board for this place, was in at one of our southern inlets about a fortnight ago, and put to sea again with water only for 4 days; since which we have no further account of her.

And some vessels lately arrived have met with many pieces of wrecks at sea, which gives us reason to fear, that the late north east winds have done considerable damage.

It seems, the Spaniards of St. Augustine, notwithstanding the late general peace, still continue the old grievance complained of by this province so long since as two or three years before the war, and which continued with it, of encouraging the desertion of slaves to them, from their owners in this province, to the great damage and loss of our planters, and other his majesty's good subjects, by declaring them free on their coming there, and protecting them as Spanish subjects: For besides many companies of those people which have gone, and attempted to go, after hostilities ceased, and even since the peace has been proclaimed in all parts, last Monday 21 Negroes swim'd at Port-Royal, went off from thence in a boat they stole from capt. James Mackay.

The horrid practice of poisoning white people by the Negroes has lately become so common, that within a few days past several executions have taken place in different parts of the country, by burning, gibbetting, hanging, &c.

St. John's, in Antigua, September 29.

Last week his majesty's sloop Speedwell came into English harbour from a cruize, having met with a very hard gale of wind on the 15th past to the northward of Barbuda, which blew from all points of the compass, and lasted 40 hours; in which they lost their main and topmasts, and were obliged to throw their 6 guns overboard, being afterwards reduced to a biscuit a day, 'til they got into English Harbour.

Capt. Perkins, in the ship ——, of Liverpool, arrived on Wednesday from Africa, and sailed the next day for Jamaica; having had the misfortune to lose 102 slaves by sickness.

Boston, November 13.

A number of gentlemen met at the town-house in Boston, on Tuesday the 7th instant, to project and agree upon some methods for advantageously improving the produce, trade, and business of the province, and promoting frugality and good oeconomy in the inhabitants; and after some discourse on those subjects, they agreed to meet again at the same place on Tuesday next, the 14th instant, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon; when and where all other gentlemen, who are disposed to promote and encourage such good designs, are desired, if they see cause, to meet and unite with the gentlemen as aforesaid.

New-

New York, November 20.

By capt. Rivers, arrived here last week from North Carolina, we have most melancholy accounts of the effects of the late storm, or rather hurricane there, on the 7th and 8th of October last; scarce a vessel in all the country but what was either drove ashore or lost: Ten vessels lying at Ocacock inlet, outward bound, waiting for a fair wind, were all lost but one brigantine belonging to Boston; amongst which was capt. Kellog, in a sloop of this port, entirely lost, and every person no board drowned: as also a schooner, unknown, which was oversett.—Two of the vessels were drove over the bar by the violence of the gale, and lost about five miles to the northward of it.—The water was drove up above ten feet higher than it was ever known to rise before; and some vessels drove up into the low lands, so far as to render them impossible ever to be got off again. Great damage has also been done in the country otherwise, by drowning of cattle, hogs, &c.

Nov. 27. By a letter from capt. Tingley, of the ship Indian King, of this port, dated in the bay of Hoadura the 18th of September last, we are informed of a terrible gale of wind at north, on the 8th of that month, they then being about 25 leagues to the eastward of Ratan; wherein they were obliged to cut away their foremast to keep her above water, and soon after their mainmast, mizenmast, and bowsprit all blew away by the violence of the wind; and their tiller breaking off in the rudder-head, she became a perfect wreck for upwards of 12 hours, every moment expecting to be their last; when the wind happily shifting to E. S. E. they made shift to clear themselves of Rattan.——The gale continued to the 10th, before they could make any sail; when they had only their top gallant sails for courses, and their long boat's sail for a mizen, till the others being carried off; in which condition they arrived the 13th. They had several of their hands much bruised; but by good Providence all their lives were saved.——The letter further informs, that several vessels have been put ashore there, and some wreck'd; amongst which is a Philadelphia Brigantine entirely lost.

ANNAPOLIS.

On Christmas Day Morning, the Lady of the Honourable BENEDICT CALVERT, Esq; was safely delivered of a Daughter.

We hear a Commission is issued for holding a special Court in Cecil County, for the Tryal of a Man committed to Prison there for the Murder of his Master.
